

ABSTRACT

The present invention provides an insulin-administering device enabling the effective administration of insulin via a percutaneous or submucous administration route.

The present device is used to percutaneously or transmucosally administer an insulin lispro represented by the structural formula indicated below, or a pharmaceutically acceptable salt thereof, using iontophoresis and electroporation.

